Ulysses

Amir Brka

When he's,
usually after midnight,
returning home,
the cold concrete of the staircase
is waiting for him,
and he,
such as he is,
cannot control
the tidal wave of ontology:

what is when
what is he's
what is returning
what is home
what is what
...?

In front of the entrance, he starts shaking empirically and sees himself as Ulysses if he manages to get through that jungle.

If not –
he realizes he's not.
